

Covehithe

Parish Code: E04009493

Area Summary

Covehithe is a small and largely unpopulated parish on the Suffolk Coast, just north of Southwold.

The area has been blighted by coastal erosion throughout its history, losing over 500 meters to the sea since 1830. This is most visible as the road to the beach meets the cliffs, at which point it leads you straight off the edge.

The parish features the ruins of an unusually large church. Only the tower remains in tact from the original building although a smaller church was built within the ruins of the original. This acts as the parish church for both Covehithe and Benacre.

Covehithe Cliffs and Beach

Fun fact: The beach at Covehithe was the location of choice for a scene in an 1999 ITV adaptation of David Copperfield. This followed in the footsteps of the Monty Python crew who filmed a sketch called ‘The First Man to Jump the Channel ‘ at the same beach in 1969.
